Who takes part?

This course is aimed at individuals who want to learn more about, or get better at, preparing and delivering presentations. On the course you will receive training in the most important, fundamental methods for becoming an even better communicator. The course is aimed at people with limited experience as well as people who have given presentations many times, but feel that they could get even better. Since the course takes its starting point in each participant, both groups will improve their presentation skills substantially during the course.

Find out exactly what works for you

On this course we will work with the methods and the theories within rhetoric. Most importantly, the course offers numerous exercises, which will help you focus on exactly what you need. Individualized feedback helps us pinpoint what works for you when you present and how you can improve.

The course is made up of two separate days about three weeks apart. On the first day of the course, you will gain insights and receive basic training before continuing to work with your experiences at home. On the second course day, you will get additional theory and exercises that will continue to develop your competences.

Practical learning method

This course takes its starting point in up-to-date rhetorical theory and combines it with a multitude of exercises, individual training and feedback. The active focus ensures that you will be presenting on stage in a safe and confidential environment. Selected exercises will be recorded on video so you can see your own strengths and improvement opportunities. In addition to the facilitator's feedback, participants will learn to give each other constructive feedback, so that everyone leaves the course with a positive experience and relevant input for how they can improve even more.

Facilitators

Kenn L. Hansen

Kenn Hansen is one of the two facilitators, you can meet on this course. Kenn has an master degree in Rhetoric from Copenhagen University with a master thesis in PowerPoint.
